Representative McDermott rose to speak in opposition to the measure, stating:

"Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in opposition. I would like permission for my remarks on the second reading of the House Bill dealing with this subject matter, although not exactly the same I think it's germane, and have that entered in by reference, please," and the Chair "so ordered." (By reference only.)

Representative McDermott continued, stating:

"It's getting down to the end of the session. We're all tired, so just a word of caution. And I go back to setting up the statutory framework bit by bit, bill by bill, piece by piece, of age 14. This is very, very dangerous, Mr. Speaker. I've cited numerous examples before. Here's one today, this will pass and become law. Next year, there will be others. What they are, I don't know, but there will be more. And where is that taking us? Where that's taking us is 15 years from now, my granddaughter, who at 14 might be dating a 30-year-old man. And we've created this statutory framework all over the place that she's emancipated. Those are my concerns, Mr. Speaker. Thank you."

Representative Belatti rose in support of the measure and asked that her written remarks be inserted in the Journal, and the Chair "so ordered."

Representative Belatti's written remarks are as follows:

"I rise in strong support of Senate Bill 2886, Conference Draft 1, Relating to Age of Consent for Adolescent Mental Health Services.

"In a recent Civil Beat article, '1 in 8 Hawaii Middle Schoolers Say They've Attempted Suicide,' attached herein, reporter Jessica Terrell explains that 24.8% of middle school students in Hawaii 'seriously thought about killing themselves' while 16% of high school students in Hawaii 'seriously considered attempting suicide.' Ms. Terrell further reports that '[f]rom 2010 to 2014, 45 youths ages 10-19 committed suicide in Hawaii. According to the Department of Health, for every child who dies, another six are hospitalized for a suicide attempt.'

"According to the Department of Health's Injuries in Hawaii Report, 2007-2011, '[s]uicide was the second leading cause of death among teenagers in Hawaii, after motor vehicle crashes, but outnumbering deaths from cancer, heart disease, and other chronic diseases.'

"Behind these heartbreaking statistics are grieving families and vulnerable youth. Senate Bill 2886, Conference Draft 1 seeks to assist the most vulnerable in our community and ensure that fewer families have to live with the devastation caused by suicide. By lowering the age of consent to mental health services to age 14, opportunities for young people to reach out for help will increase.

"Initially, this bill advanced age 12 as the age of consent, a position I support. This age matches those tough pre-teen, middle school years when youth are in the seventh and eighth grade, coinciding with the statistics that reveal that these are the years youth are beginning to struggle with the challenges that lead one too many to think about suicide. The age of 14 represents a compromise between those who are concerned about parental consent and those who too often are the service providers or government agencies who work with the troubled youth this bill is intended to help. Those who supported 12 as the age of consent include the Department of Health, the Department of Human Services, the Office of Youth Services, the Judiciary, and numerous community organizations including Hawaii Youth Services Network, Mental Health America of Hawai'i, Hale 'Opio Kaua'i, and Imua Alliance.

"As the State Judiciary testified, Senate Bill 2886 'does not overlook parents. The mental health service provider has an affirmative duty to contact and involve parents unless the provider determines that such contact is inappropriate. [This bill] strikes a balance between the rights and responsibilities of the parents, the growing need for such services to youth, and all parties' constitutional right to privacy.'

"The Department of Health echoes this sentiment and describes this bill as 'striking a balance between the immediate needs of an adolescent or teen and a parent's right to know by requiring licensed professionals to consider parental involvement first, and only after carefully assessing an adolescent or teen's maturity[.]' Other provisions recognizing the role of parents provide that: (i) a minor may not abrogate their parent's consent to receive services, nor vice-versa; (ii) a minor is under no financial obligation to the provider for services rendered; and (iii) services are limited to out-patient talk therapy and requires parental consent if treatment involves any medications or placement into an out-of-home or residential treatment program.

"Ultimately, Senate Bill 2886, Conference Draft 1 is about providing options to adolescents who are seeking help at a time when they may feel like they have few options. As stated by the Department of Health, 'some treatment is better than no treatment.' For these reasons, I strongly support passage of this bill."

"1 In 8 Hawaii Middle Schoolers Say They've Attempted Suicide

Nearly one in four say they've at least considered killing themselves. Can teaching kids about mental health earlier change that?

APRIL 20, 2016 · By Jessica Terrell

Malia-Grace Bush never knew their names, but she can still picture their faces: the kids on her middle school campus who seemed somehow off, the ones who made her think, "something's wrong."

Bush, now 19 and a member of the statewide Youth Leadership Council for Suicide Prevention, says she didn't know anything about depression in the eighth grade. She didn't have the skills or knowledge she needed to reach out to her classmates.

Chances are, a lot of them needed reaching out to.

Last year nearly a quarter of middle school students in Hawaii said they had seriously considered suicide, according to the 2015 Youth Risk Behavior Survey. One in eight said they tried to take their own lives.

Mental health and suicide prevention efforts need to start sooner for middle school students like these in a recent PE class in Honolulu, according to the state's Youth Leadership Council for Suicide Prevention.

BEHAVIOR STUDY RESULTS

High school students in Hawaii who "seriously considered attempting suicide"
1997: 25.5 percent
2015: 16 percent

Middle school students in Hawaii who "ever seriously thought about killing themselves"
1997: 28.8 percent
2015: 24.8 percent

The biennial survey, conducted by the Department of Health and the Department of Education, is slated for release in June, when national results are also available for comparison. It was previewed for the Board of Education earlier this month.

Middle school students in Hawaii have been reporting high rates of suicidal feelings since the state started surveying kids on the topic in 1997. Despite the alarming numbers, education and prevention efforts historically have focused on older teens.

That's in part because, for several years, Hawaii had the highest rate of high school students who said they had seriously considered suicide, according to the Youth Risk Behavior Survey. (In the most current available data, from 2013, Hawaii reported the seventh-highest rate in the nation.)

There's also a sense among some adults that kids in elementary and middle school are too young for such a heavy topic, that they should "just be happy," said state Department of Health suicide prevention coordinator Nancy Deeley.

That needs to change, the youth leadership council says.

Formed last year, the council had a clear message after reviewing the state's suicide prevention plan: Hawaii needs to start talking to kids about mental health and suicide sooner. Much sooner.

Why Is Middle School So Hard?

Experts say it's difficult to pinpoint specific reasons why so many teens in Hawaii report feeling suicidal.

Anxiety, which might be an even bigger contributor to suicide attempts than depression, is a more prevalent issue for youth in Hawaii than in other states, said Deborah Goebert, a professor and associate director of research at the University of Hawaii's John A. Burns School of Medicine.

But it's unclear why anxiety levels are higher in Hawaii.

Teens in high school may face as many — or more — stressors as they did in middle school, but they are also more likely to have developed a range of coping strategies.

There are also some groups within the state that seem particularly at risk for depression, anxiety and suicidal feelings, including Native Hawaiians, kids living in rural or economically depressed areas and military children. Risk factors are complex, however.

Many experts say that middle school is just a uniquely tough time for kids anywhere.

Middle school students are undergoing enormous transitions. Their bodies are changing. Their hormones are changing. And for kids getting on social media for the first time, the way they interact with their peers is changing.

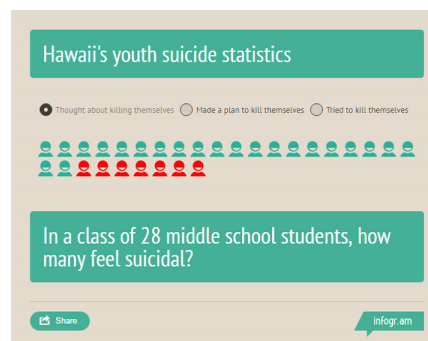

Bullying is more prevalent in middle school. In 2015, one in four middle school students in Hawaii said they had been electronically bullied in the previous year, and 45 percent said they had been bullied on campus, according to the preliminary youth survey results.

In high school, those figures dropped to 14.7 percent coping with electronic bullying and 18.6 percent experiencing bullying on campus.

There's also the maturity factor. Teens in high school may face as many — or more — stressors as they did in middle school, but they are also more likely to have developed a range of coping strategies.

Click on the various options in the graphic below to see what the 2015 risk-behavior middle school survey results would look like in a class of 28 students.

Finally, depression in middle school can be hard to identify.

The youth survey asked students if they have felt sad or hopeless for an extended period of time. Asking students if they've been feeling angry every day might be a better indicator of depression, Goebert said.

"In the school system if someone is angry and acting out, they are not necessarily referred to mental health," Goebert said. "That's usually a referral for the vice principal to take care of, and not necessarily seen (as a sign) that someone is struggling."

Changing Strategies

One of the biggest statewide efforts in preventing youth suicide has been focused on "gatekeeper" training — helping peers, teachers, parents and community members learn to identify and reach out to at-risk youth.

WARNING SIGNS

The following are warning signs to watch out for, according to the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline:

"Talking about wanting to die or to kill themselves. Looking for a way to kill themselves, such as searching online or buying a gun. Talking about feeling hopeless or having no reason to live. Talking about feeling trapped or in unbearable pain. Talking about being a burden to others. Increasing the use of alcohol or drugs. Acting anxious or agitated; behaving recklessly. Sleeping too little or too much. Withdrawing or isolating themselves. Showing rage or talking about seeking revenge. Displaying extreme mood swings."

"If youth don't feel supported, if they can't identify what's going on internally, it's really hard to get them help," said Mara Pike, Pono Youth Program manager at Mental Health America of Hawaii. "So the idea is to get the trainings going so they can identify when they need help or if someone else looks like they are having a hard time they can talk to them as peers."

Much of the training was funded by a federal grant that ended in 2014, for a partnership between UH and Mental Health America focused on high school students.

The training has continued without grant funding, although resources are tight. One way that Mental Health America is trying to make the effort sustainable is by creating the youth leadership council to facilitate more peer-to-peer outreach.

This year, because of the suggestions of young adults on the youth council, the group modified its suicide prevention training curriculum so that it can be used at middle schools, Goebert said.

During the council's first meeting last year, members said the biggest state need was for student education in elementary and middle schools about mental health and suicide. Many members said they received some training in developing coping skills in high school, but learning the skills earlier would have allowed them to support each other and themselves, Pike said.

State curriculum benchmarks for middle and high school have requirements for emotional and mental health education. But young people on the council are saying that more teachers and adults need to really use the word "suicide" and be comfortable talking about it, Pike said.

The group also said more adults need to be trained on how to work with youths effectively, Pike said. For example, crisis workers who man the state suicide hotline don't necessarily have specific training in youth counseling, she said.

YOUTH SUICIDE IN HAWAII

From 2010 to 2014, 45 youths ages 10-19 committed suicide in Hawaii. According to the Department of Health, for every child who dies, another six are hospitalized for a suicide attempt. Suicide is the second leading cause of death for people in this age group.

Hawaii has had challenges with professional development training on suicide prevention in schools. According to a 2014 national study by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, only 17.7 percent of lead high school health teachers in Hawaii had received professional development on suicide prevention over the prior two years — the second-lowest rate in the nation.

In January, the Department of Education rolled out a statewide training program, open to both school officials and community members, as part of a new mental health pilot program.

Project HI AWARE (Advancing Wellness and Resilience in Education), which is being piloted in three school complex areas in Hawaii, aims to increase awareness of childhood mental health issues and improve coordination between schools, the Department of Health and community resources, said Chad Farias, superintendent for the Kau-Keaau-Pahoa complex on Hawaii Island.

The goal is also to identify strategies that can be used throughout the state, including Youth Mental Health First Aid training.

GETTING HELP

National Suicide Prevention Lifeline: 800-273-8255

Crisis Text Line: Text 'START' or 'HELLO' to 741-741

Crisis Line of Hawaii: O'ahu, 808-832-3100; neighbor islands: 800-753-6879

The department hopes to train 3,000 youth mental health "first aiders" over the next four years.

"These are issues that need to be addressed, but these are issues that are treatable if they are approached properly," Farias said.

Lawmakers are also expected to pass a resolution soon calling for the state's suicide prevention task force to create a plan for reducing suicides in the state by 25 percent in the next decade.

The subcommittee in charge of coming up with the strategic plan would include at least two members of the youth leadership council.

In the meantime, schools like Kailua Intermediate are working to address mental health issues by targeting campus bullying and monitoring student behavior and academic progress through early intervention systems.

Sometimes, academic performance is nine-tenths of the problem, Kailua Principal Lisa DeLong said.

"If they are feeling successful, that helps," DeLong said."

Representative Fukumoto Chang rose in support of the measure and asked that her written remarks be inserted in the Journal, and the Chair "so ordered."

Representative Fukumoto Chang's written remarks are as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of SB 2886, SD 2, HD 2, CD 1. Every year, 10 children in Hawaii die from suicide, 53 are hospitalized, and 140 are sent to the emergency room due to attempted suicide. According to the Hawaii State Department of Health (DOH), from 2009 to 2013, suicide was the second leading cause of death among children aged 10 to 19 years old. This measure would allow minors 14 years old and older to seek mental health treatment or counseling without the approval of their parents. Hawaii law already allows minors to seek medical treatment for substance abuse. According to the Department of Health, 20 states and the District of Columbia allow for minors to consent to mental health treatment.

"This measure will save children's lives by giving them access to mental health care. But at the same time, it will not infringe upon a parent's rights. Although the minor can access mental health services, they will not be able to receive prescription medication or out-of-home therapy without parental consent, and providers are required under this measure to keep parents informed to the best of their ability. It is for all these reasons that I am in support of SB 2886, SD 2, HD 2, CD 1. Thank you, Mr. Speaker."

Representative Har rose in support of the measure with reservations and asked that her written remarks be inserted in the Journal, and the Chair "so ordered."

Representative Har's written remarks are as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Bill 2886, SD 2, HD 2, CD 1, with reservations. The intent of the bill is to reduce barriers to accessing mental health services for minors by lowering the age of consent to receive treatment and services. The age of consent in these cases would be lowered from 18 years of age to 14 years. It attempts to improve mental health services using methods other than prescription medication or out-of-home or residential treatment. While I support the overall intent of the measure to improve mental healthcare, I note my reservations on the grounds of compelling state interest, potential precedent, and financial liability.

"While there is merit to protecting the health and well-being of our keiki, I am concerned that it is not entirely appropriate to grant legal sovereignty to 14-year-olds outside of the consent of their parents or guardians. Family is important, and if the State wants to overstep the jurisdiction of the family, it must do so with a strong compelling interest for the well-being of the public or the child. In this sense, SB 2886, SD 2, HD 2, CD 1 is vague, allowing a large amount of discretion on the part of a child and that child's mental healthcare provider. Care should be taken to ensure that this level of discretion is held tightly, especially since it could potentially be used to stonewall parents out of a child's healthcare proceedings.

"Further, the precedent set by this bill is to allow legal grounds for 14-year-olds. I have heard the concerns of many of my colleagues here in the House and agree with their worry that 14 years of age is too early for children to be given the sovereignty and opportunity to, as I mentioned before, stonewall their parents out of their lives. As the legal framework this bill will eventually create expands, the age of 14 will remain law. This has the potential to be used as a standard in policy and judicial proceedings in the future. While it is understandable to ensure that children in precarious situations are protected by the laws of our state, the broad strokes painted by this law may go far beyond the intent of simply protecting the children.

"Finally, I am concerned that the bill excuses several parties from financial responsibilities for mental health services, but does not appropriate funds to cover the exemption. Licensed mental health professionals, just like any professionals, cannot be reasonably expected to work without compensation. It is admirable that this bill protects patients/counselees from financial liability, but this admirable exemption has the potential to be the hamartia of the bill. It is in the best interest of the State to provide the best service to at-risk children, but the best licensed mental health professionals cannot and should not work for free, and it is unfair for the State to expect them to do so.

"I agree that we must protect our children, Mr. Speaker. However, we must do so in a way which will provide specific protections based on compelling state interest, avoid ungrounded precedent, and be careful about approaching mental health provision unilaterally. For these reasons I stand in support of Senate Bill 2886, SD 2, HD 2, CD 1, with reservations. Thank you, Mr. Speaker."

The motion was put to vote by the Chair and carried, and the report of the Committee was adopted and S.B. No. 2886, SD 2, HD 2, CD 1, entitled: "A BILL FOR AN ACT RELATING TO AGE OF CONSENT FOR ADOLESCENT MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES," passed Final Reading by a vote of 41 ayes to 6 noes, with Representative Har voting aye
