"Mr. President, I rise on a point of personal privilege.

"About an hour ago I was watching a live television interview with the Governor and I was very happy to see the Governor since we have not seen the Governor very much during this legislative session. And it was a very interesting interview, Mr. President, because the Governor was asked during the interview whether or not he made any threats against any Senators for any of their actions. And he said no, he made no threats. And he was asked if there would be any retaliation against any Senators, and the Governor replied that retaliation was not his priority.

"And then, Mr. President, the question was asked if he in fact could work with you further in the future. And the Governor responded that yes, he could work with you, Mr. President, professionally, and then he brought my name into it, somehow, saying that he could work with me, also, professionally, but not socially and that you don't have to love people that you work with. So I felt very good about that, in a way. And then the Governor did say that he has been hard at work behind the scenes but now it's time to bring the issues into the sunlight. So, since this is the 59th day of the session, I'm very happy that we're finally going to see some sunlight on many of these issues that we've all been concerned about.

"So I was hoping that you had seen it too so that you would feel as warm and fuzzy as I do, Mr. President.

"Thank you very much."
